

Summary of the doctoral dissertation:

"The reform of supervision over the financial market of the European Union in response to the economic crisis. Legal issues "

This doctoral dissertation deals mainly with the legal aspects of the financial supervision reform in the Union, whose aim is to protect Member States from the economic crisis. The dissertation has been divided into five chapters.

The first of them includes - in addition to introductory notes - information on the scope and assumptions for the dissertation, justification of the dissertation topic, presentation of goals, research methods and hypotheses, as well as indication of research difficulties. The content of the first chapter determines the direction in which further considerations will be made.

The second chapter of this dissertation is devoted to the theoretical aspects of financial supervision. This chapter is of great importance for understanding the essence of administrative authority in European Union law. In addition, this chapter presents the structure of financial supervision in each of the twenty-eight Member States. Presenting the diversity of the financial supervision model is supposed to demonstrate, already at this initial stage of the dissertation, a considerable difficulty in the implementation of supranational and unified EU supervision.

The third chapter of the doctoral thesis describes the structure of EU financial supervision before the outbreak of the economic crisis. Characterizing the model of this supervision will allow the assessment of its effectiveness, and will also enable to answer the question about the legitimacy of the introduction of the EU financial supervision reform.

The fourth chapter of the dissertation introduces the reader to the merits of consideration, as it was devoted to the issue of a new financial supervision architecture, with particular emphasis on the institutional nature of this reform, including the competences conferred on the new bodies. The legal analysis of this issue will allow us to answer the problem issues raised in the first chapter, including the research hypotheses posed.

The fifth chapter deals with the project of creating a banking union. An important element is drawing attention to the existing competences of the European Central Bank and the new powers granted by the EU legislator. A particularly important issue for this dissertation, which will be discussed in the second-to-last chapter of the dissertation, is the assessment of the legality of the banking union project, including the European Union's competence (or lack of it) to adopt such legal solutions.

The last chapter is a summary of all the considerations and drawing conclusions from previously asked research questions. In addition to the conclusions contained in the last chapter of the doctoral dissertation, there are also postulates that are intended to indicate solutions for systemic value.
